

Mainstreaming OSH into Education: Towards a Culture of Prevention

Second day wrap-up

Ulrike Craes, BGW, Germany & Davorin Kacian UCASS, Croatia

Networking exercise

Exhibition of Utopia on OSH:

Networking – a driver towards mainstreaming OSH into education in Europe

We have to “mushroom” OSH into educational institutions!

Ulrike Bollmann, DGUV/ENETOSH

The whole school approach:

Health and safety as a promoter of educational quality / the quality of educational establishments

The topics of health and safety will only survive in school if they contribute to the quality of the school. The good healthy school is the appropriate concept to work with.

Peter Paulus, Leuphana University, Germany

How to reach young people? "Speak up – stay safe"

– an age appropriate approach to health and safety

“Speak up – stay safe” is a campaign that seems to become a movement of young people for their own well-being. Encouraging confident communication through exciting, initiative tools and based on real life experiences.

Matthew Holder, BSC, UK

The evidence based approach: Implementing evidence-based-practices (EBP) on health and safety education in schools

Dialogue between research and practice is the best way forward.

Mikko Nykänen, FIOH, Finland

EU-OSHA's campaigns and materials

– a success story

Mainstreaming OSH into education has been one of the flagship projects of the Agency (EU-OSHA) and Napo for teachers is our last contribution to help primary school teachers to introduce basic health and safety knowledge in the classroom.

Marta Urrutia, EU-OSHA

Reaching youth through the workplace:

“Wise up to work”

Embed risk awareness in vocational curricula so that workers become risk aware not risk averse themselves and through their example and the way they work improve the awareness of health and safety and proportionate risk to young workers.

Jill Joyce, IOSH, UK

Working safe on the workforce:

Reaching vulnerable groups

Not only young workers are at stake. It's one of the groups that are vulnerable, like old people or migrants. Be aware of their specific needs but most important is to embed them in all trainings.

Annick Starren, TNO, The Netherlands

Official Greeting by the European Agency for Safety and Health at Work (EU-OSHA) (Video)

Challenge: a holistic and participant approach of OSH for young and adult workers.

Conclusion:

- think pragmatically
- make synergies
- share experiences

Sarah Copsey, EU-OSHA

Reaching youth and adults with disabilities

Focus of this presentation was on the importance of teaching young and adult workers with disabilities about OSH: A curriculum developed by LOHP for this population and vulnerable workers was also presented.

Robin Dewey, LOHP/UC, US

Get ready! Beginning to see similarities

Leslie Nickels, NIOSH, US

End of the 2nd day
